Sen. Collins: Maskless Trump set a poor example at White House

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — Republican Sen. Susan Collins said Tuesday she was “shocked” to see President Donald Trump discharged from the hospital so soon, and said Trump set a poor example by appearing at the White House without a mask.

“When I saw him on the balcony of the White House, taking off his mask, I couldn’t help but think that he sent the wrong signal, given that he’s infected with COVID-19 and that there are many people in his immediate circle who have the virus,” she said. “I did not think that was a good example at all.”

The White House is now a coronavirus hotspot, with both the president and first lady having contracted the virus, along with others in their inner circle.

Collins, who has been critical of Trump’s handling of the coronavirus pandemic before, calling his performance “extremely uneven.” She’s running against Democrat Sara Gideon, the Maine House speaker, in one of the most competitive senate races in the country — one of a handful that could decide whether Republicans keep control of the U.S. Senate. It’s the costliest political race in state history.

Collins is seeking to persuade voters who oppose Trump to stick with her. Collins has not said whether or not she’ll cast her ballot for the president. She says she didn’t vote for him in 2016.

EU program spots largest ozone hole over Antarctica in years

GENEVA (AP) — The European Union’s Earth observation program said Tuesday that the ozone hole over Antarctica has swelled to its largest size and deepest level in years.

Experts at the Copernicus Atmospheric Monitoring Service said a strong, stable and cold polar vortex has driven the expansion, and called for greater international efforts to ensure countries abide by an international accord to phase out use of ozone-depleting chemicals.

Vincent-Henri Peuch, who heads the service, said in a statement that the ozone hole was “definitely” among the largest in the last 15 years.

Ozone depletion over the Antarctic continent was first noticed in 1985.

In Geneva, spokeswoman Clare Nullis of the World Meteorological Organization said the ozone hole begins to expand every August — at the start of the Antarctic spring — and reaches a peak around October.

“The air has been below minus 78 degrees Celsius, and this is the temperature which you need to form stratospheric clouds — and this quite (a) complex process,” Nullis said at a U.N. briefing. “The ice in these clouds triggers a reaction which then can destroy the ozone zone. So, it’s because of that that we are seeing the big ozone hole this year.”

The Copernicus service said energy from the sun as it rises over the pole releases chemically-active chlorine and bromine atoms into the polar vortex, which quickly destroy ozone molecules — causing the hole to form.

Nullis said that despite the growing hole, experts still believe the ozone layer is slowly recovering after adoption of the Montreal Protocol, a treaty signed in 1987 that aims to phase out ozone-depleting substances. She cited climate projections indicate that the ozone layer will return to 1980 levels in 2060.

‘Saturday Night Live’ show has best season opener since 2016

By DAVID BAUDER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — The big debate — the one between Alec Baldwin and Jim Carrey — was a winner in the ratings.

“Saturday Night Live” scored its biggest season premiere audience in four years and second best in 12 years, emphasizing the importance of presidential election time for the NBC comedy show.

Its “cold open” featured Baldwin, portraying President Donald Trump, satirizing last week’s debate performance. Carrey debuted with his impersonation of Democratic opponent Joe Biden.

During a busy week for news and sports, “Saturday Night Live” was the most-watched entertainment show, despite starting at 11:35 p.m. on the East Coast, the Nielsen company said. It was shown live across the country, which meant it aired during prime time in the West.

With 8.24 million viewers, it was the second most-watched “SNL” episode since May 2017, with the exception being last December’s triumphant return of Eddie Murphy.

It was also a return to its familiar New York studio for the comedy show, which did a few remote episodes last spring because of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The strong ratings overshadowed some rough reviews. “The Late Shift” author Bill Carter called it a “standout — not in a good way” for some uniformly flat skits.

“We needed ‘Saturday Night Live’ to rise to the occasion for this moment, and it didn’t,” agreed Eric Deggans, critic for National Public Radio. “Let’s hope the nation’s firehose of news will slow a bit, and the show will have time to catch its breath and raise its game.”

NBC was the most-watched broadcast network last week, averaging 5.5 million viewers in prime time. Fox had 3.9 million viewers, ABC had 3.8 million, CBS had 2.7 million, Univision had 1.14 million, Ion Television had 1.11 million and Telemundo had 1 million.

Fox News Channel topped the cable networks with an average of 5.18 million viewers in prime time. ESPN had 3.9 million, CNN had 2.85 million, MSNBC had 2.8 million and HGTV had 1.16 million.

ABC’s “World News Tonight” won the evening news ratings race with an average of 8.2 million viewers, NBC’s “Nightly News” had 7.3 million and the “CBS Evening News” had 5.4 million.

For the week of Sept. 28-Oct. 4, the top prime-time program was the U.S. Presidential Debate, Fox News, 17.88 million.

Second was NFL Football: Philadelphia at San Francisco, NBC, 15.08 million.

In search of essential vitamin D

DEAR DOCTORS: I’ve heard that a lot of people don’t get enough vitamin D in their diet. What about getting it from the sun? Is that too risky? Also, what happens if you don’t get enough?

DEAR READER: Vitamin D is a fat-soluble nutrient that our bodies require in order to absorb calcium from the intestines. That calcium is then used to harden the tissues of the skeleton, a process known as mineralization. Vitamin D is also crucial to bone growth, plays a role in managing inflammation, helps prevent involuntary muscle spasms and aids in the regulation of blood phosphorus levels.

Not getting enough vitamin D makes it difficult to maintain adequate levels of calcium and phosphorus, which can cause bones to gradually become thin and brittle. Together with calcium, vitamin D also helps protect older adults from osteoporosis. In children, a lack of the vitamin can lead to rickets, a disease that interferes with mineralization. Rickets is a sometimes painful disease, marked by poor skeletal formation and soft, weak bones that can become malformed.

When our skin is exposed to sunlight, our bodies become natural vitamin D factories. The energy in ultraviolet rays triggers a complex chemical reaction that, along with help from the liver, kidneys and certain cellular structures, results in the formation of vitamin D. The nutrient is also naturally available in fatty fish, including tuna, mackerel, salmon and sardines, and in smaller amounts in certain foods such as beef liver, cheeses, egg yolks and some mushrooms. However, we don’t eat these foods in large enough quantities to satisfy our body’s ongoing need for vitamin D. To help make up for a potential deficit, a range of prepared foods are fortified with the nutrient. These include orange juice, breakfast cereals and dairy products, as well as some soy, rice and noodle products.

The amount of vitamin D that you need to maintain optimal bone health depends on your age. Infants up to 1 year old should get 400 international units (IU) per day. Children, teens and all adults up to the age of 70 are advised to get 600 IU. After age 70, when our bodies become less efficient, the recommendation increases to 800 IU per day.

It’s rare, but possible, to get too much vitamin D. The addition of the nutrient to prepared foods is carefully regulated, and our bodies naturally limit the amount they manufacture from sun exposure, so you’re not going to run into problems there. If you’re going to rely on vitamins or supplements for your vitamin D intake, be sure to check with your health care provider.

Getting enough vitamin D from the sun depends on location, weather and skin type. Also, sunscreen limits how much a person can produce. For those with light skin, 15 to 30 minutes of full sunlight on bare arms, legs or torso a total of two to three times per week is adequate. Due to the protective effects of melanin, darker skin requires longer exposure. People with any kind of skin cancer history or risk should rely on diet and supplements to get their daily allowance.

Stocks drop after Trump calls off talks on the economic stimulus

By STAN CHOE, DAMIAN J. TROISE and ALEX VEIGA
AP Business Writers

Stocks dropped on Wall Street Tuesday after President Donald Trump ordered a stop to negotiations with Democrats on a coronavirus economic stimulus bill until after the election.

The S&P 500 index slid 1.4 percent after having been up 0.7 percent prior to the president’s announcement, which he made on twitter about an hour before the close of trading. The late-afternoon pullback erased most of the benchmark index’s gains from a market rally a day earlier.

In a series of tweets, Trump said: “I have instructed my representatives to stop negotiating until after the election when, immediately after I win, we will pass a major stimulus bill that focuses on hard-working Americans and small business.” He also accused Speaker Nancy Pelosi of not negotiating in good faith.

The comments from the president came just hours after Federal Reserve Chair Jerome Powell urged Congress to come through with more aid, saying that too little support “would lead to a weak recovery, creating unnecessary hardship for households and businesses.”

Optimism that Democrats and Republicans would reach a deal on more stimulus ahead of the Nov. 3 elections had helped lift the stock market recently. Now, investors face the prospect that more aid may not come until next year, after the new Congress is seated, said Willie Delwiche, investment strategist at Baird.

“This isn’t just pushing it off until after the election, this realistically is pushing it off until spring,” Delwiche said. “I don’t think this is just a one-day financial markets reaction. This really goes to the health of the recovery.”

The S&P 500 fell 47.66 points to 3,360.97. The Dow Jones Industrial Average dropped 375.88 points, or 1.3 percent, to 27,772.76. It had been up by more than 200 points. The Nasdaq composite lost 177.88 points, or 1.6 percent, to 11,154.60. The tech-heavy index had been on pace for a 0.5 percent gain before Trump cut off the stimulus talks.

Small stocks also fell, but less than the rest of the market. The Russell 2000 index of small-cap stocks gave up 4.67 points, or 0.3 percent, to 1,577.29.

Stocks had been drifting between small gains and losses for much of the day before gaining momentum into the late afternoon, then Trump’s tweets knocked the market into reverse gear.

The move to nix the negotiations with Democrats dashes Wall Street’s hopes that another round of stimulus would soon be on the way. Bitter partisanship on Capitol Hill has been preventing a compromise on more aid for the economy, which has been punched into a recession by shutdowns related to the pandemic.

Floods in France, Italy swept bodies out of cemeteries

By DANIEL COLE
Associated Press

BREIL-SUR-ROYA, France — The grim job of searching for flood victims in Alpine villages and on the nearby French and Italian coasts has grown even more gruesome: Along with storm casualties, authorities say corpses from cemeteries have also been found around the Mediterranean shore, apparently swept down the mountain by violent rains.

A total of 12 deaths have been reported since the storm pounded France’s Alpes-Maritimes region and Italy’s northwestern regions of Liguria and Piedmont starting Friday — four on the French side, eight on the Italian side.

Prime Minister Jean Castex said French rescuers were still searching Tuesday for 21 people missing.

“My thoughts go to grieving families, those who are waiting to hear from their relatives or who have lost everything,” he said at the National Assembly.

Castex said more than 900 rescuers, 500 police officers and some troops were involved in the emergency operation in the mountainous region, which is home to 12,000 residents.

He added that about 700 people were staying in hotels or other accommodation sites after being evacuated from their homes.

French President Emmanuel Macron will visit the area Wednesday.

Corpses unearthed from cemeteries have washed up on the Italian side, a spokeswoman for the Alpes-Maritimes regional administration told The Associated Press. She could not say how many or where they came from, and it was unclear whether the bodies were among the eight reported dead in Italy from the storm. Italian local authorities could not immediately be reached for comment.

The cemetery corpses were in such an advanced state of decomposition that they were clearly distinguishable from recent storm victims, the French spokeswoman said.

Local authorities have said cemeteries in the French towns of Saint-Martin-de-Vesubie and Tende were partially washed out by the floods. Tende Mayor Jean-Pierre Vassallo told Le Parisien newspaper that the village cemetery “was cut in two” and bodies were unearthed.

Forensic police working to identify the dead are among the security forces, firefighters, rescue divers and others helping Tuesday in the continuing search and cleanup effort, according to a spokesman for France’s national gendarme service.

Police are going door-to-door to check on people reported as missing in hamlets where roads, electricity, communications and water supplies were cut off by the storm, the spokesman said.

Neither spokesperson was authorized to be publicly named according to official policy.

In Breil-sur-Roya, the river that runs through the village of 2,000 residents, usually known for trout fishing, turned during the storm into a torrent of mud, rocks and debris.

Longtime residents describe the damage in biblical terms, saying they’d never seen anything like it.

Some have started to clean up, spending their whole day shoveling mud out of shops and homes while trucks hauled away felled trees to clear streets and roads. Cars coated in caked mud were piled on top of each other.

Military leaders quarantined after official tests positive for coronavirus

By LOLITA C. BALDOR
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation’s top military leaders were under self-quarantine Tuesday after a senior Coast Guard official tested positive for the coronavirus, the Pentagon said. The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Mark Milley, and the vice chairman, Gen. John Hyten, were among those affected, U.S. officials said.

Military leaders who were in contact with Adm. Charles W. Ray, the vice commandant of the Coast Guard, were told Monday evening that he had tested positive, and they were all tested Tuesday morning, according to several U.S. officials. Pentagon spokesman Jonathan Hoffman said in a statement that none have exhibited symptoms or have so far tested positive.

Ray was in a meeting of the Joint Chiefs of Staff late Friday morning in what’s called the Tank — the classified meeting room in the Pentagon. Officials said that is where most of the military leaders were exposed to him, but he also had other meetings with officials.

The news stunned officials at the Pentagon. Top leaders there have largely remained free of the virus, although there have been a number of outbreaks across the active duty force and the reserves around the nation and overseas. Overall more than 47,000 service members have tested positive for the virus, as of Monday, 625 have been hospitalized and eight have died.

It is not known how Ray contracted the virus. He attended an event for military families at the White House about ten days ago, as did several military leaders. But it’s not clear if he contracted the virus there or elsewhere, officials said.

The Coast Guard said in a statement that Ray felt mild symptoms over the weekend and was tested on Monday.

Hoffman said the quarantining of leaders won’t affect “the operational readiness or mission capability of the U.S. Armed Forces.” He added that, “senior military leaders are able to remain fully mission capable and perform their duties from an alternative work location.”

Top military leaders have robust communication systems installed in their homes as a routine matter, and many have sporadically worked from home during the pandemic for a variety of reasons. Some stayed home after having been exposed to the virus and other military leaders have self-quarantined for a short time after returning from travel.

Hoffman’s statement did not identify those affected, but multiple U.S. officials said that besides Milley, they included the chiefs of the Army, Navy, Air Force and National Guard, as well as the head of U.S. Cyber Command, Gen. Paul Nakasone. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss information not yet made public.

At least 14 military officials — including some staff members of the chiefs — are believed to have been potentially exposed to the virus after meetings last week with Ray. Hoffman said the military is conducting additional contact tracing to identify anyone who may have been exposed.

Hurricane Delta now Category 4, roars at Mexico’s Yucatan region

By LUIS ANDRÉS HENAO and GABRIEL ALCOCER
Associated Press

CANCUN, Mexico — Delta rapidly intensified into a Category 4 hurricane with 140 mph winds Tuesday on a course to hammer southeastern Mexico and then continue on to the U.S. Gulf coast this week.

The worst of the immediate impact was expected along the resort-studded northeastern tip of Mexico’s Yucatan Peninsula, where hurricane conditions were expected Tuesday night and landfall early Wednesday.

From Tulum to Cancun, tourism-dependent communities still soaked by the remnants of Tropical Storm Gamma could bear the brunt of the storm.

In Cancun Tuesday, long lines stretched at supermarkets, lumber yards and gas stations as residents scrambled for provisions under mostly sunny skies. Officials warned that residents should have several days of water and food on hand. Boat owners lined up at public ramps to pull their boats out of the water.

Mexico began evacuating tourists and residents from coastal areas along its Riviera Maya Tuesday. Quintana Roo Gov. Carlos Joaquín said that buses were already carrying people off Holbox Island and hotels in Cancun and Puerto Morelos were busing their guests inland to government shelters.

Some hotels that had exemptions because their structures were rated for major hurricanes were preparing to shelter their guests in place and testing their emergency systems.

When the alarm blared at the Fiesta Americana Condesa hotel, Lizeth Elena Garza Hernandez, 35, rushed out of her room carrying in her arms her 10-month-old daughter, Hannah Cienfuegos. She had arrived Sunday from Reynosa, Tamaulipas with her husband, 4-year-old daughter and her parents-in-law.

“I’m scared because we don’t know how it could impact here, because we’ve never been in a situation like it,” she said.

Joseph Potts, a deputy sheriff from Denver, Colorado, took care of his 3-year-old son near a kiddie pool while his wife attended an emergency information session about the hurricane. The hotel offered to shelter guests at a ballroom inside the hotel, but a short time later after the storm intensified the hotel told them they would all be moved to a university in Cancun.

“The hurricane kind of popped up overnight and we just want to get it over with and go back to the beach,” Potts said.

Cancun Mayor Mara Lezama Espinosa said that the city had opened more shelters than usual to give people more space in recognition of the COVID-19 pandemic.

State Tourism Minister Marisol Vanegas said there were currently 40,900 tourists in all of Quintana Roo. That number is a fraction of what it would normally be due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The area’s economy was devastated by months of pandemic-caused lockdown.

At the Moon Palace resort just south of Cancun, hundreds of guests from Moon Palace hotels on Cozumel, Isla Mujeres and beachfront rooms were being moved into a hurricane shelter at the resort’s large exposition center.

Bedding, food and entertainment were being provided at the expo center for guests until the hurricane passes, said Cessie Cerrato, the public relations manager for Palace Resorts.

“It’s massive,” Cerrato said of the convention hall. “It’s super safe and further away from the water.” Given the coronavirus pandemic, the hall will allow safe distancing, and face masks will be required for guests.

The state ordered all non-essential businesses to close by 1 p.m. and banned the sale of alcohol. Hurricane-strength winds were expected by Tuesday evening and landfall to occur near Puerto Morelos just south of Cancun between 1 a.m. and 2 a.m. Wednesday.

Just south of Puerto Morelos in Playa del Carmen, tourist Zena Koudsi of Charlotte, North Carolina was taking a final walk along the beach before Delta hit.

“Never been to a hurricane area,” Koudsi said. “Never been to Mexico. I was expecting maybe more sun, less waves, but, you know, we’re trying to make the best of it.”

Mexican President Andrés Manuel López Obrador said Tuesday that 5,000 federal troops and emergency personnel were being made available in Quintana Roo to aid in storm efforts.

The state’s airports remained open Tuesday morning, but beaches were closed.

“I honestly don’t see much that will stop it until it reaches Yucatan, due to low vertical wind shear, high deep-layer moisture, and the very warm and deep waters of the northwestern Caribbean,” National Hurricane Center forecaster Eric Blake said.

Cuba’s westernmost province and the Cayman Islands were under tropical storm warnings on Tuesday as Delta shifted west.

It’s expected to arrive with an extremely dangerous storm surge raising water levels by as much as 7 to 11 feet in the Yucatan, accompanied by large and dangerous waves, and flash flooding inland.

Delta’s center Tuesday was about 260 miles east-southeast of Cozumel, Mexico, moving west-northwest at 16 mph.

Once it moves on from Mexico, it’s expected to regain Category 4 status over the Gulf as it approaches the U.S. coast, where landfall around Friday would be followed by heavy rainfall across the southeastern United States.

“While there is large uncertainty in the track and intensity forecasts, there is a significant risk of dangerous storm surge, wind, and rainfall hazards along the coast from Louisiana to the western Florida Panhandle beginning Thursday night or Friday. Residents in these areas should ensure they have their hurricane plan in place and monitor updates to the forecast of Delta,” the Hurricane Center said.

Alabama Gov. Kay Ivey on Tuesday signed a state of emergency that she said would let officials seek federal aid more quickly if needed later.

Beach communities on the Alabama coast are still clearing away the damage from Hurricane Sally, which made landfall at Gulf Shores on Sept. 16, as they warn people to be ready for Hurricane Delta.

Back in Cancun, Mexican tourists Stephanie Vazquez, 30, and her husband Fernando Castillo, 38, took one last dip in the pool at the Fiesta Americana hotel in Cancun Tuesday with their 2-year-old Leonardo Castillo Vazquez.

Vazquez said she was feeling “nervous, worried,” about Delta.

Gary fire leaves man, girl dead, grandmother hurt

GARY, Ind. (AP) — An overnight house fire in Gary killed a 6-year-old girl and a 30-year-old man and left a grandmother hospitalized in critical condition, authorities said Tuesday. Firefighters were called to the two-story home around 4:45 a.m. and found the man, Dennis Liggins, dead in a bedroom toward the rear of he house, Gary Fire Chief Sean O'Donnell told The (Northwest Indiana) Times. A search of the house located the 6-year-old, Ciara Brown, who was pronounced dead at a hospital, O'Donnell said. Both lived in the home. Fire officials initially reported Liggins was 21 years old.

are thankful to receive funding to support our efforts.” This initiative is made possible through a partnership between the Indiana Destination Development Corporation (IDDC) and the Indiana Arts Commission (IAC), providing operational support to local organizations whose operations were disrupted by COVID-19. “Receiving funds from the DMO grant program will ensure the Museum can continue to provide the quality educational programs and guest experience that has come to be expected by visitors from throughout northeast Indiana,” said Mitch Figert, president and CEO of the Wabash County Museum. “Since March, the Museum has had to cancel numerous events and temporarily shutter the doors for guests, school visits, and researchers. Since reopening, the Museum continues to see a decline in attendance and memberships and these grant funds will allow for the continued care of the Museum’s robust collection of more than 175,000 artifacts and ensure a safe and engaging experience for families and groups who visit the Museum moving forward.” Award amounts were determined by a formula that included factors for budget size, previous amounts of CARES Act funding received and amount of eligible expenses, resulting in an equitable distribution to organizations in all areas of the state. Each grantee will be responsible for documenting the use of all distributed funds. On Monday, Joanne Case, Manchester Symphony Society Board president, said the “wonderful” grant would help their organization greatly. “This past Sunday, Oct. 4, for the first time since February, we had a live-streamed and in-person, socially distanced strings-only concert, giving us a taste of what we might accomplish with these additional resources,” said Case. The conductor, Dr. Debra Lynn, said like many symphony orchestras around the world, the Manchester Symphony Orchestra (MSO) had to cancel our final two concerts last year “for the safety of our musicians and our audience during those early months of COVID-19.” “While this brought our expenses down somewhat, the greater impact was our loss in ticket sales. Without in-person interaction at live events, we also lost a vital connection with our patrons, causing a decrease in donations. This has been a difficult loss, especially at a time when we are beginning publicity and fundraising for an exciting new guest artist residency fund,” said Lynn. “As the pandemic wore on, we have actively followed aerosol super-spreader research regarding musical instrument use and singing, much of which was begun in June and is still continuing. Funds from this grant will help support and sustain the MSO in the aftermath of those cancelations and will be crucial to moving us forward with equipment purchases enabling the safe inclusion of winds and some singing during our 2020-2021 season. It will also help make live streaming possible for audiences who wish to attend concerts from their homes. A significant percentage of our patrons reside in retirement communities and are, at times, restricted from leaving their campuses; therefore, I am particularly pleased that we will be able to send our concerts online to this dedicated group of MSO supporters.”

homecoming game. This year they faced the Rochester Zebras. The Norse held a good fight as the score remained 28 to 0 at halftime. The court ceremony commenced. Last year’s queen, Alyssa McKillip, was in charge of crowning the new king and queen. The crowd was eager to know who would be crowned. Finally, McKillip proceeded to crown Andrew Burns, as king, and Addi Baker, as queen for the class of 2021. Burns is involved in cross country, track and student council at Northfield. He plans to become a Navy Seal. “My favorite part about homecoming week was being named king. It makes me feel like I’m doing something right since everyone voted for me,” said Burns. Baker is involved in softball, volleyball, basketball, Sources of Strength and National Honor Society at Northfield. She plays travel softball for Indiana Magic Gold. She plans to attend Southern Illinois University to play softball. She is undecided with her major. “My favorite part of homecoming was all of the dress-up days. It also means a lot that others voted for me to be on court,” said Baker. Topping off the homecoming week was the win from the varsity football team. The Norse came out victorious against Rochester ending the game 62 to 0. Alina Reed, Plain Dealer Freelance Reporter, may be reached by email at sports@wabashplainealer.com.

U.S. trade deficit up to $67.1 billion in August, a 14-year high for the nation

By PAUL WISEMAN
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit rose in August to the highest level in 14 years. The Commerce Department reported Tuesday that the gap between the goods and services the United States sells and what it buys abroad climbed 5.9 percent in August to $67.1 billion, highest since August 2006. Exports rose 2.2 percent to $171.9 billion on a surge in shipments of soybeans, but imports rose more — up 3.2 percent to $239 billion — led by purchases of crude oil, cars and auto parts.

The U.S. deficit with the rest of the world in the trade of goods such as airplanes and appliances set a record $83.9 billion in August. The United States ran a surplus of $16.8 billion in the trade of services such as banking and education, lowest since January 2012. The politically sensitive deficit in the trade of goods with China fell 6.7 percent to $26.4 billion. So far this year, the United States has recorded a trade gap of $421.8 billion, up 5.7 percent from January-August 2019. Hammered by the coronavirus and its fallout on the world economy, total U.S.

trade — exports plus imports — is down 15.1 percent so far this year to $3.2 trillion. “Overall, trade flows remain subdued and the outlook is uncertain given a muted global growth and demand backdrop,” said Rubeela Farooqi, chief U.S. economist at High Frequency Economics. President Donald Trump campaigned on a pledge to bring down America’s persistent trade deficits. He imposed taxes on imports of steel, aluminum and most products from China, among other things; and renegotiated a North American trade pact in an effort to encourage more production in the United States. But the trade deficit won’t yield easily to changes in trade policy. As the U.S. economy recovers from springtime shutdowns, Americans are buying more imported goods while foreign demand for U.S. products remains weak. U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer issued a statement on the monthly trade deficit report Tuesday, defending the president’s record. Lighthizer noted that the U.S. deficit in the trade of goods is down 2.4 percent so far this year and would have fallen more if it weren’t for a surge in gold imports by investors.

Wabash boys win fourth straight TRC title

The team takes championship Saturday

By ROY CHURCH

Powered by three seniors, the Wabash boys cross country team walked – no pun intended – away with the 2020 Three Rivers Conference championship for the fourth straight year here Saturday.

All four Wabash County schools had at least one finisher among the top 10 and Southwood's Braden Sweet was the overall winner in 16:20.5. Wabash's Zack Reed was runner-up in 16:38.5, Manchester's Carter Bedke was third in 16:47.3 and Northfield's Andrew Burns was ninth in 17:56.0. All four are seniors.

Sweet was the defending champion and finished second in 2018.

The Apaches took the team title with 35 points, ahead of Manchester in second (84 points), Rochester third (100), Southwood fourth (123), Peru fifth (126), Maconaquah sixth (145), Northfield seventh (154), Tippecanoe Valley (the host) eighth (161), Whitko ninth (251) and North Miami 10th (286).

With the victory comes the unofficial title of "Wabash County champions" since this is the only time this season all four county teams were at the same meet.

After Reed for Wabash were Jarrett Wilson, fourth in 16:58.1; Dave Ford, fifth in 16:59.8; Troy Guenin-Hodson, 11th in 17:57.4; and Caelan McDougale, 13th in 18:05.4. Rounding out the top seven were Kaden Vogel, 15th in 18:10.5, and Trevor Daughtry, 19th in 18:31.1.

"This was a good tune up in preparation for the state tournament," Head Coach Ryan Evans said. "Training has been progressing steadily and the guys are ready to start the championship season."

Behind Bedke for the Squires were Raven King, 14th in 18:10.1; Cade Jones, 16th in 18:21.5; Lane Stetzel, 22nd in 18:48.1; and Jacob Hesting, 29th in 19:22.8. Rounding out the top seven were Kedrick Metzger, 30th in 19:26.0, and Caden Marcum, 31st in 19:26.1.

Following Burns across the 5K finish line were Grant Dale, 27th in 19:15.1; Karson Pratt, 32nd in 19:48.0; Alex Reed, 38th in 20:03.7; and Brandon McKillip, 48th in 21:23.3. Rounding out the top seven for the Norse were Ben Kissel, 57th in 22:21.2, and Ryan Brunett, 58th in 22:24.9.

Other finishers for Wabash were Nick Perkins (24th), Lincoln Saldivar (26th), Sammy Smith (34th), Eli

Callahan (38th), Jacob Fuchs (43rd), Ethan Berry (55th) and Braydon French (58th). Manchester's other runners were Kaden Dillon (46th), Raice Martin (53rd), JD Eberly (56th), Isaac Diaz (57th), Caleb Smith (63rd) and Kenneth Martin (91st). Southwood's Dean Elzy was 81st and Northfield's remaining runners were Clay Herring (76th), John Nessler (78th) and Tristan Barlow (79th).

In the girls race, won by Madilyn Calloway of Rochester in 19:29.1, Manchester sophomore Josie Briner was the top Wabash County finisher. She was fourth in 20:26.0.

Freshman Mara Zolman led Northfield with a ninth-place finish in 21:51.5, Sierra Hall was 23rd for Wabash in 24:01 and Monica Hobson topped Southwood in 27th in 24:17.6.

Manchester finished third (63 points) and Northfield fourth (118) behind Rochester (31) and Maconaquah (39). Whitko was fifth (129) and Peru sixth (147). Wabash, Southwood, Tippecanoe Valley and North Miami did not field complete teams.

Also scoring for the Lady Squires were Anna Markham (12th in 22:01.8), Kambree Cashdollar (15th in 22:21.5), Evyn Fox (21st in 23:44.1) and Miriam Struble-Hedstrom (24th in 24:09.7). Rounding out the top seven were Gracie Dale (26th in 24:14.3) and Paula Martin (30th in 24:29.9).

Freshman Calisen Kugler of Wabash was 23rd in 29:24.4 and teammate Grace LaMar was 55th in 29:54.4. Southwood's Mariah Brown was 41st in 25:43.4 and Amelia Sweet was 42nd, one-tenth of a second behind.

The final three runners for Manchester were Carissa Edwards (33rd), Kaesyn Lester (44th) and Ainsley West (48th).

Next up for the high school squads are the IHSAA sectionals Saturday. Wabash, Southwood and Northfield head down to Indiana Wesleyan University for the Marion Sectional, while Manchester hosts. Racing begins at 10:30 a.m.

The Wabash boys were second behind Oak Hill last year at Marion while Southwood was eighth and Northfield 10th. Wabash's Dereck Vogel won the event but Sweet was runner-up and Burns was 11th. Manchester was fifth at the Culver Academies Sectional with Bedke taking sixth.

Manchester's girls were third last year, led by Briner's seventh-place finish.

Norse varsity football's rushing attack rolls over Zebras

Northfield will be traveling Friday to Whitko

By ALINA REED

Wabash Plain Dealer Freelance Reporter

Northfield football shined under the lights on Friday night, as they controlled the TRC match-up against the Rochester Zebras from start to finish. Norse fans were able to see a very high scoring game right from the very beginning. Senior Clayton Tomlinson returned the opening kickoff 60 yards setting the Norse up in very close range. From there, it only took four plays before sophomore Mason Fisher ran a flea-flicker, pitching the ball to senior Alex Hauptert as he ran in his first touchdown of the day from 10 yards out.

On their next drive, the Norse kept their ground game rolling, getting first downs from senior Jarret Shafer, senior Jake Halderman, and Mason Fisher. Set up on second and goal, quarterback, Halderman, kept the ball for himself and scrambled in for a three-yard rushing touchdown, ending the first quarter with a 14 to 0 Northfield lead.

Starting in the second quarter, the Norse exploded on their lead, putting the game out of reach very early. Another successful flea-flicker gave the Norse another touchdown, this one being a pass from Tomlinson to senior Michael Fisher. As the Norse defense forced another three-and-out, the offense got the ball back and kept firing. Fans got to see the first big air attack of the night, as Halderman connected with Hauptert for a 42-yard touchdown pass. On their next possession, junior, Jaydan Goshert, took a carry and ran 43 yards for a touchdown of his own. The Norse defense made another big stop, followed by Tomlinson returning the punt for a 60-yard touchdown, sending the game to halftime with a 42 to 0 Northfield lead.

Hauptert started the second half with the same offensive spark, getting his third touchdown of the evening, this one being a 50-yard rush. As the fourth quarter progressed, the Norse saw two more touchdowns, the first one being a 2-yard rush from freshman Turner Stevens. The Norse were able to capitalize on one more big play as the night ended, as junior John Clark scrambled for a 23-yard rushing touchdown to finalize the Norse with a huge 62 to 0 win. The Norse ran for 335 total yards, as Hauptert led the attack with 134 yards of his own.

"We played well as a team tonight. We were able to put our offense together through all four quarters. I hope we continue to win throughout our normal season so we can make a run in sectionals," said Hauptert.

"Although winning is great, I love being able to improve and progress further as a team," said Tomlinson.

Northfield picked up their third straight win, moving to 4 and 3 on the year. They look to keep their win streak rolling next Friday, Oct. 9, as they travel to Whitko.

Wabash boys win RRC championship

Near-perfect season ends with the title for the second year in a row

By ROY CHURCH

The Wabash Middle School boys cross country team closed out its near-perfect 2020 season here Saturday by winning the Running Rivers Conference title for the second year in a row.

The Apaches, who opened the season by winning the Wabash County meet on Aug. 19th, took five of the first nine places in cruising to their 50-point victory over runner-up Rochester (21-71). They were led by Chase Howard and Bobby Shull, who went first and third in 11:05.5 and 11:19.4, respectively.

Teammates Drew Guenin-Hodson and Jace Bullins finished fifth and sixth in 11:19.9 and 11:25.8, respectively, and Isaiah Cordes closed out the scoring in 11th in 11:56.9. Shull, Guenin-Hodson and Cordes are seventh-graders.

"I thought we had a good race plan coming into the meet and the guys executed it well," Head Coach Ryan Evans said. "Jonas (Church) was still battling an injury but decided to run anyway so he could help the team in whatever way possible. Isaiah (Cordes) and Coleson (Kugler) stepped up and took the mantle, racing together knowing their places mattered."

"Our sixth through 10th runners have really been a driving factor in our success this season. Many times these guys don't get the credit they deserve because they aren't in the scoring five, but they consistently pushed forward and challenged the top five, making them work to keep their spots."

Manchester's Trey Howard (no relation to the winner) took second overall in 11:14.8, Northfield's Tate Barlow finished 10th in 11:49.7 and Southwood's Luke Andrews was 18th in 12:19.3 to lead their teams.

Northfield came in third in the team standings with 76 points and Southwood was fifth (115). Manchester and three other schools did not field complete teams. Rochester was runner-up, Maconaquah fourth and host Tippecanoe Valley sixth.

Behind Barlow for the Norse were Jaden Baer (16th, 12:17.3), Ty Leming (19th, 12:24.8), Kourtland Pratt (22nd, 12:41.6) and Steven Kowalczyk (26th, 12:58.2). Behind Andrews for the Knights was Cooper Drake (20th, 12:26.3), James Unger (25th, 12:56.2), Andrew Wright (43rd, 14:33.0) and Luc Neal (55th, 16:10.2).

Rounding out the field for Wabash was Coleson Kugler (12th), Kasen Oswalt (14th), Ezra Church (17th), Jay French (27th), Braxten Lakin (30th), Jonas Church (33rd), Kristian Stanton (42nd), Maverick Sommers (49th) and Kaden Rosen (62nd). For Northfield, it was Holten Satterthwaite (31st), Luke Hauptert (36th), Lucis Bever (39th), Ethan Hoover (40th), Xavier Roark (46th), Landon Mast (51st), Wyatt Bucher (53rd) and Landon McLaughlin (61st). Southwood's other runner was Carter Winget (60th) and Manchester's other two runners were Kyler Dale (7th) and Taylor Markham (13th).

During the season, the Wabash boys also won the North Miami Invitational, the Wildcat Invitational at Indiana Wesleyan University, the State Preview Meet in Terre Haute, a three-way home meet and their own Wabash Invite a week ago. Their only loss was at the West Noble Invite, where they tied for third.

In the girls race, Manchester's Ayla

Cashdollar ended the 2020 season the same way she started it – winning. The eight-grader began the season winning the Wabash County at home and ended it winning the RRC title in 11:57.2.

Team-wise, Manchester, Wabash and Southwood finished third, fourth and fifth, respectively, behind Maconaquah and Rochester. Northfield did not field a complete team, despite winning the afore-mentioned county meet, because many of its runners are fifth-graders and not eligible to compete Saturday.

Raegan Jones paced the Lady Apaches with a 12th-place finish in 13:52.7. Lola Winer topped Southwood in 8th place in 13:37.7 and Mikayla Meyer led the Lady Norse in 18th in 14:11.7.

Also scoring for Manchester were Kadence Fox (7th in 13:29.8), Chase Blevens (21st in 14:23.0), Shelby Cahill (41st in 16:31.1) and Colson Baert (42nd in 16:31.5). Southwood's other scorers were Shelby Thomas (20th in 14:19.7), Audri Winer (36th in 15:47.8), Jaila Corn (40th in 16:16.3) and Olivia Ranck (52nd in 17:50.7). For Wabash, it was Chloe Cooper (27th in 14:46.5), Rinka Higuera (28th in 14:52.2), Mallory Tart (32nd in 15:10) and Bridget Bailey (33rd in 15:16.7).

Rounding out the field Manchester were Allie Evans (45th), Kaylee Fetters (46th), Maggie Akins (49th), Kelzei Fox (54th), Olivia Wyant (55th) and Avery Akins (63rd). Southwood's only other runner was Makenna Hunter (57th). Wabash's other finishers were Mia Fairchild (34th), Ava Bishir (35th), Ivy Beamer (39th), Maya Howard (44th), Audri Shidler (47th) and Olivia Shelton (59th). Northfield's other three runners were Emme Hanes (22nd), Amarah Bowers (51st) and Zarla Dunn (62nd).

Indians expect manager Francona back for 2021

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Cleveland Indians expect manager Terry Francona to return for the 2021 season after he missed 48 games in 2020 due to health reasons.

President of Baseball Operations Chris Antonetti said Tuesday that the 61-year Francona is back home in Arizona resting and recovering.

Francona was hospitalized during the season after undergoing surgery for a gastrointestinal issue and then dealing with blood clotting complications.

Antonetti has been in daily contact with Francona, Cleveland's manager for the past eight seasons.

The Indians have made the playoffs eight times since he came to the club in 2013.

Francona is expected to speak with the media on Wednesday.

On Trump and COVID-19, just tell the truth to the American people

When it comes to the coronavirus pandemic, the Trump administration has hardly been transparent or truthful. On numerous occasions, top officials, and President Donald Trump himself, have withheld, underestimated, downplayed and outright lied. But when actual scientists and medical professionals have been allowed to speak, they have generally been as accurate as possible. That ended Saturday when the president's physician, Dr. Sean Conley, refused to provide meaningful disclosure on the president's condition during a late morning briefing with reporters.

Conley delivered the reassuring and welcome news that the "president is doing very well" and doctors are "extremely happy" with his progress. But the doctor undercut his credibility by saying he'd "rather not" give information on such questions as Trump's fever before admission and where and when the president contracted the virus. Conley was evasive when pressed about the use of supplemental oxygen.

Actually, Dr. Conley, the American people would rather that you do provide information. In fact, they insist on it. The health of the president is of urgent national and international security concern. All you have to do is tell the truth, without spin or evasion.

The opaqueness of the response was even more troubling when, minutes after Conley concluded his briefing, an administration official (later identified as White House chief of staff Mark Meadows) told pool reporters at the hospital that the president was actually in worse health than was indicated in the briefing, calling his vital signs over the previous 24 hours "very concerning" and saying the next 48 hours could be crucial.

At Sunday's briefing, Conley, a Navy officer who is paid by the taxpayers but reports to the commander in chief, was modestly more forthcoming about Trump's vital signs and medications. The doctor said "the president has continued to improve" and acknowledged that Trump had been running a high fever and been given supplemental oxygen at the White House on Friday.

Asked why he had ducked questions Saturday, he said he was trying to "reflect the upbeat attitude" of the medical team. At another point, in response to an inquiry about whether Trump is in a negative-pressure room, Conley replied that he was "not going to get into the specifics" of the president's care.

Really? Then why bother with these briefings? The point ought to be to deliver honest, factual information about the president's condition and prognosis, not rosy scenarios. The public can handle the truth; a lack of transparency only feeds anxiety and conspiracy theories.

Sunday's briefing left unanswered questions about how high the president's fever had been, whether he had received more supplemental oxygen on Saturday, whether he has signs of pneumonia, the level of inflammation in his body and the date of his last negative COVID-19 test.

Sadly, the confusion and mixed messages underscored how Trump and his aides make scant distinction between the institution of government and the man who occupies its top office. This behavior is less like a modern president than it is Louis XIV, the 17th and 18th century king of France who blithely observed, "L'etat, c'est moi." I am the state.

Reports on the president's condition came as at least three Republican senators and several high-ranking Republican officials tested positive as well, testament to how the White House itself has become a place where COVID-19 has spread.

Of particular concern was an event held on Sept. 26 to announce the nomination to the Supreme Court of Judge Amy Coney Barrett. Few of the attendees wore masks, and many could be seen greeting each other with hugs and handshakes.

Numerous Trump invitees to Tuesday's presidential debate in Cleveland also did not wear masks, ignoring rules established by the Cleveland Clinic.

In a year with so much turmoil already, news that the president and first lady Melania Trump had tested positive for COVID-19 was the latest shock. For many, this "October surprise" came with a kind of silent numbness. For others, it was a chance to condemn the president's lackadaisical attitude toward masks and social distancing, or to make breathless predictions about the news' impact on the election or the Supreme Court.

The best course for the public is to take a deep breath and join in wishing the president and first lady a speedy recovery. The best course for the White House is to level with the American people.

Some thoughts on the rural-urban divide

A background to the coming election will be the growing rural-urban divide in America, and how it affects political prospects on the coming decades. Some of the handwringing will be overwrought, but there are a few critical points to consider in the years ahead. I begin by dispelling some myths.

Rural places are culturally and ethnically very diverse. They differ profoundly in types of economic activity, the ethnic origin and religion of inhabitants, and the political tendencies of voters. West Texas ranches are vastly different from Vermont farms or inland California almond farms, which differ greatly from Nebraska row crops, Florida orange groves or Washington vineyards. Looking beyond agriculture, we see that manufacturing, mining and tourism mean the industry structure of rural places are also very different. These places are populated by different people, from different places, and are as diverse and full of cultural variation and wonder as any great city.

Rural places in the U.S. differ as fully as Peoria does from New York City, Washington, D.C. from El Paso or Savannah from Pittsburgh. Drawing big political conclusions about the rural and urban divide based on such diversity of culture is risky. However, there are significant differences between rural and urban places that tend to influence public policy. The first is population growth.

Over the last century, America's rural counties haven't really grown. We have roughly the same number of rural residents as we did in Teddy Roosevelt's administration, but urban America is more than five times larger. Four out of five Americans live in urban counties as designated by the Office of Management and Budget. To be fair, many of the urban counties have plenty of row crops in them, and rural counties have many small cities. Also, much of the growth in urban places came in formerly rural counties, as has always been the case. Still, urban counties differ in other meaningful ways that are likely to influence future policy. The second big issue is taxes and spending.

Rural places are large beneficiaries of federal dollars. By some estimates, per capita spending by the federal government is twice as high in rural than urban places. Most of this goes into agriculture subsidies, so rural communities probably don't perceive the spending. Most may not actually benefit from it. Still, that is a legitimate critique offered by urban taxpayers, who foot most of the bill. Rural residents ought to be more conscious that these large subsidies provide few benefits for their community, while alienating urban taxpayers.

There's no national study, but here in Indiana, rural places are also big beneficiaries of state tax dollars. This is per a 2011 study jointly authored by Ball State and the Indiana Fiscal Policy Institute. In that study, we estimated that rural places get more than $560 more per resident in taxes than they pay, while urban places get almost $160 less per resident than they pay. It is a plain fact that state and federal taxpayers subsidize rural places at the expense of cities and suburbs. What is not so clear is whether or not this spending makes a meaningful difference in the lives of rural people. I suspect it does not. This is almost certainly true in every other state.

Just looking at Indiana, we also see that rural places tax themselves less than urban places. Per capita taxes in Indiana's rural counties are almost 10 percent lower than in urban counties. I suspect this is true across the nation, and is a significant economic and political problem for rural America.

It's a hard thing to ask citizens of prosperous and growing places, in need of infrastructure and services, to subsidize a static or declining region. We are an affluent nation and can bear it now, but the unwillingness of rural places to invest in themselves hardly commends more subsidies from urban taxpayers. I believe a reckoning is coming, and it will force rural places to think more intelligently about tax and spending priorities. That begins by admitting that large regional transfers have to have some sort of broader benefit, and that rural taxpayers will have to bear a greater share of that burden.

There are other differences between rural and urban places that influence spending priorities. Urban places are richer, and, when you control for industrial differences, more productive. Here in Indiana, urban counties have per capita income that is 10 percent higher than in rural counties. That helps balance the higher taxes and lower spending that urban places receive, but the most startling differences lie in educational attainment.

Urban counties have more than a 50 percent higher share of adults with a bachelor's degree than do rural counties. Part of this is clearly attributable to household sorting. The income benefits of education are higher in urban places. In short, that is why cities exist in the first place, as clustering places for skilled workers.

A full 76 percent of the differences in income between rural and urban places are explained by differences in educational attainment. By itself, this is strong evidence that rural areas are unlikely to grow without capturing a larger share of educated adults. And this fact ties together the challenges for population growth, taxes and spending and education for rural places.

The most likely way outsized spending on rural places will benefit the nation as a whole is if the result is more resilient and prosperous communities. For the most part, that goal will be elusive for rural communities that do not find some clear linkages to a nearby city. It will also be nearly impossible for rural places to prosper if they don't shrink the education gap with urban places. This is a backdrop to the current election that will be with us for decades.

Joe Biden will return decency to America

President Trump, you have had almost four years to lead the United States and have failed us by your choosing. Whether it be in foreign policy and domestic policy you have not protected the United States as Commander-in-Chief.

Now comes the latest news about your complete disrespect for our military and total disregard for the COVID-19 virus. We the American people have finally borne witness to what happens when they place an incompetent business leader into the Oval Office. Quality of life is not a business decision sir but rather it is a humane choice to be empathetic to those who cannot help themselves.

Joe Biden has that empathy and will return the United States to the era when we were respected internationally because of how we treat our citizens domestically.

This election is a clear choice between those who have never had it so good and those of us who know we can do better. Joe Biden will lead us there.

Fellow citizens, exercise your right to vote to preserve your sacred heritage, promote your children's future and obtain the blessings of liberty we all cherish.

To restore a sense of decency to the United States rise and vote.

Braun and Young should support cultured meat research

If Sens. Mike Braun and Todd Young care about animal welfare, they should support federal funding for cultured-meat research. For those who don't know, cultured meat is grown from cells, without slaughtering non-humans. It has the potential to save billions and billions of creatures every year who are killed for food.

Many people recognize there is something problematic about our relationship with animals, particularly those raised on factory farms. Cultured meat will make it easier for these people to align their values and actions. Legislators should encourage compassionate choices by helping bring this revolutionary protein to market.

Wabash County United Fund opens 2020 campaign

Signs at Courthouse, North Manchester to track progress toward $250K goal

STAFF REPORT

Wabash County United Fund officially opens its 2020 Campaign on Friday afternoon when United Fund staff and members of the Board of Directors gathered on the Wabash County Courthouse lawn for a sign raising ceremony, according to Steve Johnson, executive director.

The progress sign, one of two in Wabash County, shows a campaign goal of $250,000. The second sign will be placed at the intersection of Indiana 13 and Indiana 114 in North Manchester.

“This has been a particularly eventful year for United Fund. The pandemic, business closures and employee layoffs created a completely new set of people who found themselves in need of assistance. The situation helped us recognize some of the vulnerabilities we face as a community that is concerned for people in need. United Fund created an Emergency Assistance Fund through which to channel COVID-related grants and donations. Corporation foundations like Ford Meter Box Foundation, Owens Corning Thermafiber Foundation, Paperworks Corporation, First Financial Bank Foundation and Lilly Endowment supported the work by contributing to the Fund,” said Johnson.

Some of the local investments made in response to local need include:

- $30,000 for people in need of rent, utility, medical or childcare assistance;
- $40,000 for nonprofit organizations to help them purchase PPE, sanitizing supplies, and technology upgrades that will help keep their staff, volunteers and patrons safe and healthy;
- $15,000 for childcare scholarships; and
- $25,000 to support community health and emergency planning.

Also, United Fund resurrected the Local Board for the Emergency Food and Shelter Program that will bring an estimated $30,000 into the community this year alone to help purchase food and provide overnight housing as needed.

“United Fund will strive to continue this impactful work next year, in part, through the efforts of local partner agencies and programs,” said Johnson.

Agencies that have been approved for funding in 2021 include 85 Hope, The Access Youth Center, Advantage Housing, ARC of Wabash County, Blessings in a Backpack in Wabash and North Manchester, Hands of Hope, Hoosiers Feeding the Hungry, Lighthouse Rescue Mission, Living Well in Wabash County (Wabash County Transit and Community Cupboard Food Pantry), Manchester Early Learning Center, Pathfinder Services VITA Program, Wabash County Tobacco Free Coalition, WAMA Community Assistance Program, Wabash FAME, Wabash County Cancer Society, Roann Community Building, Somerset Community Building and Urbana Community Building.

United Fund seeks to mobilize the community around three main initiatives.

1. Education: To address the education challenge by offering effective strategies and approaches to all income levels to re-frame education and increase graduation rates.
2. Health/Healthy Living: To address quality of life concerns facing individuals and families and to encourage a sense of well-being and promote healthy living while connecting community members to available physical and mental health support resources.
3. Income/Financial Stability: To address the obstacles that prevent hard-working families from getting ahead financially while promoting community-change strategies to help families meet their basic needs while gaining the financial capability to plan for, and accomplish their long-term financial goals.

United Fund is governed by a volunteer Board of Directors. Current members of the Board include Mark Frantz, president; Cathy Wolfe, vice president; Kim Matthews, treasurer; Marilyn Custer-Mitchell; Jim Widner; Deanna Maller; Pam Guthrie; Alex Winger; Mike Keaffaber; Teresa Gremaux and Julie McCann.

For more information, call 260-563-7649 or email info@wcunitedfund.org. Donations may be made at the United Fund website at www.wcunitedfund.org.

Pence takes lead role in campaign with Trump travel stopped for now

By BRIAN SLODYSKO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With President Donald Trump ill with COVID-19, Vice President Mike Pence took the lead role in campaigning Monday, starting a swing through key states to bolster the president’s chance for reelection.

Trump left Walter Reed Military Medical Center and returned to the White House Monday evening, but it’s unclear when he’ll be able to travel.

“I spoke to the president a little while back. He sounded great,” Pence told reporters at Joint Base Andrews before heading west to Utah for this week’s vice presidential debate.

“When the president told me that he was headed back to the White House, he told me to head to Utah. And we’re looking very much forward to the vice presidential debate,” he said. “The stakes in this election have never been higher and the choice has never been clearer.”

Pence wants to keep the president’s supporters energized and deflect criticism of the administration’s handling of a virus that has killed more than 210,000 Americans. Trump’s positive diagnosis Friday has intensified scrutiny of the administration’s cavalier approach to the pandemic. The spotlight on Pence will be especially bright Wednesday when he participates in the vice presidential debate with California Sen. Kamala Harris. Pence will almost certainly be pressed to explain shifting accounts of the president’s health over the weekend and justify Trump’s decision to hold large in-person campaign rallies during a pandemic — events that often flouted public health guidelines by congregating thousands of mostly maskless supporters.

“Normally, the vice presidential debate is inconsequential. That is not the case in 2020,” said Alex Conant, a Republican strategist who worked on Florida Sen. Marco Rubio’s 2016 presidential bid. “The public has so many questions about how we got here and it’s an opportunity for Pence to answer some of those.”

Pence has often been called upon to smooth over fallout from Trump’s messy decision making and divisive policies. Since the 2016 campaign, he has served as a bridge of sorts between a brash, thrice-married former reality television star who long bragged about womanizing and the more traditional branch of the Republican Party, particularly conservative evangelicals.

The smooth diction and humble demeanor Pence brings to the role was honed in the 1990s as a conservative talk-radio host in Indiana, when he referred to himself as “Rush Limbaugh on decaf.”

His approach hasn’t always been successful. As Indiana’s governor from 2013 to 2017, he was so relentlessly on-message that he sometimes struggled to contain fallout from fast-moving crises.

That includes his handling of backlash over a 2015 law he signed that allowed business owners to deny service to gay people for religious reasons, which was later amended as a result of the uproar. During an interview with George Stephanopoulos on ABC when he was governor, Pence grew flustered after failing to answer direct questions about whether discrimination against gay people should be legal.

“George!” Pence protested before letting out an audible sigh. “C’mon.”

The debate with Harris will be a major test. The former California prosecutor’s political rise was fueled by searing exchanges with political rivals during major congressional hearings. And she is certain to press the issue of the virus and Trump’s diagnoses when the two meet in Salt Lake City.

“That will be his challenge. But it is one he is well-suited for,” said Cam Savage, a veteran Republican strategist from Indiana who has closely observed Pence’s political career.

“With Pence you get a very disciplined leader who is not likely to make mistakes.”

One major uncertainty is what sort of condition Trump will be in during the weeks ahead. His administration has offered rosy assessments of his health, but Trump’s blood oxygen level abruptly dropped twice in recent days and he was given supplemental oxygen before his hospitalization.

There are also concerns that Pence could himself catch the virus while campaigning, a troubling scenario that raises serious questions about national security and the transfer of power if either he or Trump took a turn for the worse.

After the debate, Pence says, it’s back to “business as usual” and the campaign has appearances planned for him, as well as Trump’s children and other top surrogates, in an effort billed as “Operation MAGA.” Pence is slated to visit Arizona and Florida and will return to Indiana on Friday to vote early.

“We’ve got a campaign to run,” Pence said Saturday on a call with staff. “I promise you, this president, as soon as his doctors say so, he’s going to be back out there.”

Pence often evokes faith when describing his approach to public office, citing the biblical concept of “servant leadership.”

As Harris pitches to Black voters, some want to hear more; she will debate Pence tonight

By KATHLEEN RONAYNE and KAT STAFFORD
Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. —

Standing before Sen. Kamala Harris at a campaign event near a Raleigh barbershop, Marcus Bass asked the Democratic vice presidential nominee a pointed question: How would she and Joe Biden convince young Black voters their ticket isn’t simply the lesser of two evils?

“I appreciate your question and the point,” Harris replied. “Nobody is supposed to vote for us — we need to earn it.”

That’s what Harris, the first Black woman to appear on a major party’s presidential ticket, is trying to do in swing states like North Carolina, as the presidential contest enters its final weeks. In conversations at barbershops and historically Black colleges and universities, through ads on popular websites and live Instagram interviews, Harris is pitching herself and Biden as a team that can make meaningful progress on issues that matter to Black Americans, like police reform, ending the new coronavirus pandemic and creating a more equitable economy.

She’ll have the chance to pitch to her biggest audience yet on Wednesday, when she is expected to debate Vice President Mike Pence. Harris is likely to deliver a message that’s particularly resonant for Black Americans, including the disproportionate toll the coronavirus has taken on their communities and the vital need for access to health care.

The theme takes on a new significance after President Donald Trump was hospitalized with the virus, reviving criticism of the administration’s handling of the pandemic.

The intensifying focus on the vice presidential debate offers Harris an important chance to address doubts about the Democratic ticket.

Biden’s history-making selection of Harris as his running mate has energized and excited many Black voters, particularly women, who are among the Democratic Party’s most reliable voters. Harris attended Howard University, an HBCU, and was a member of the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority. Members donning the sorority’s green and pink colors can often be spotted outside her events.

But she’s still facing skepticism about her past as a prosecutor, and some young Black voters say they’re looking for something more than a politician who looks like them. They’re not yet convinced Biden and Harris are committed or able to execute meaningful change.

“I do think they have a lot more work to do,” said John Ray, a 32-year-old Black man who works with youth in Detroit. “We know that grandparents and certain age demographics are already going to vote. So, should a lot of energy be spent there, or should we be trying to really activate those populations that historically don’t vote? Some are saying, ‘What are you going to do beyond campaign promises to actually make things better for me in my community?’”

Harris has appealed to Black voters during recent visits to Michigan and North Carolina, including those who couldn’t or didn’t vote in 2016 and those whom Trump is courting, particularly Black men. Despite Trump’s efforts, Black voters nationally support Biden by a wide margin, who are among the Democratic Party’s most reliable voters. Harris attended Howard University, an HBCU, and was a member of the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority. Members donning the sorority’s green and pink colors can often be spotted outside her events.

Her message in Detroit, the nation’s largest Black city, was clear: I see you.

“There’s so much that is about Detroit, as not only a measure of our country and its excellence but also as a matter of the challenges that we face as a nation,” Harris said, recognizing the unique challenges facing the city, which was devastated by COVID-19 and the economic fallout.

She chose Shaw University, an HBCU in Raleigh with a history in the civil rights movement, as the site of her first North Carolina visit, where she delivered a speech on the Supreme Court.

Bianca Wilburn, a senior at Shaw University, learned through her work with an advocacy group last year that many of her peers thought voting didn’t matter, a perception that she’s worked to change. Wilburn, who is 21, called Harris’ visit to campus a “wow” moment before the California senator greeted students and grooved to a drumline performance.

“It means a lot to be a Black woman and just Black in America, period,” she said.

But Tory Jackson, a 36-year-old mental health worker from Raleigh who is Black, said many of his friends are resigned to another Trump win and may opt out of voting. He likened it to staying in a bad relationship instead of gambling on a new one.

“We’ve dealt with him for four years. We’ve already seen what he can and can’t do. We already know his antics,” said Jackson, who plans to vote but not for Trump.

Harris can rattle off with ease a lengthy list of policies aimed at improving the lives of Black Americans; one of her challenges is making sure those policies break through. They include investing $70 billion in HBCUs and working to reduce racial gaps in home and business ownership through tax credits for first-time home buyers and ensuring access to capital for Black small-business owners.

Indiana attorney general candidates are split over virus powers

By TOM DAVIES
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana’s attorney general candidates are divided over how the Republican governor has used the state’s emergency powers law to impose a mask mandate and other coronavirus-related executive orders that have stirred discord among conservative voters.

But it is the Democratic candidate who fully supports Gov. Eric Holcomb’s legal authority while the Republican candidate is emphasizing what he calls the need to curb that power.

Holcomb has faced criticism from some conservatives — including the current Republican Attorney General Curtis Hill — over the 44 executive orders that he has issued since first declaring a statewide public health emergency on March 6.

Some of that pushback has focused on Holcomb’s refusal to use his exclusive power to recall legislators to the Statehouse since their regular 2020 session ended March 11 — just as COVID-19 shutdowns started spreading across the country.

Republican attorney general candidate Todd Rokita calls the coronavirus very contagious and worse than the flu, but says he wants to work with legislators to revise the state emergency law, which was largely drafted in 2003 following the 9/11 terrorist attacks. Rokita said he believed it was meant for temporary situations such as floods, tornadoes or terrorist actions, even though epidemics are included among the 29 situations specified in the law.

“I don’t see in reading it that it’s at all meant for something with the duration as long as this pandemic,” Rokita said.

Rokita is a former congressman and Indiana secretary of state. He won the Republican nomination over Hill after the state Supreme Court suspended Hill’s law license for 30 days; Hill had been accused of groping a state lawmaker and three other women during a party.

Holcomb dropped any possible criminal penalties from the statewide mask mandate in July after Hill argued the governor was overstepping his authority and that only the Legislature could take such a step.

Democratic attorney general nominee Jonathan Weinzapfel said he wouldn’t have undercut Holcomb’s mask order and that Rokita isn’t supporting the governor’s mandate by wanting to kick the issue to the Legislature.

“He’s on the wrong side of science, the wrong side of public health,” Weinzapfel said. “He can stand with Curtis Hill. I will stand proudly, on this issue, with Governor Holcomb.”

Several members of the Republican-dominated Legislature have said they will propose limits on the governor’s emergency authority, such as capping the number of 30-day extensions he can declare without legislative consent.

Weinzapfel, a former Evansville mayor and state representative, said since Indiana’s part-time Legislature only meets a few months a year, the governor must be able to respond in emergencies.

“I would hope they will maintain that authority for the governor,” Weinzapfel said. “I’m sure there are plenty of things that could be changed to make it more reflective of what we’ve experienced over the last few months.”

The discontent over Holcomb’s coronavirus orders has some longtime Republicans saying they will vote for Libertarian gubernatorial candidate Donald Rainwater in November’s election. Election Day is less than 30 days from today.

Presidential debates and what really matters

There wasn't much to say about the first presidential debate between Donald Trump and Joe Biden. The lowest point may have been when Trump went after Biden's son Hunter and his addiction struggles. There are legitimate questions to be asked about Hunter Biden and his international dealings, but addiction is not the issue to raise on a national stage. How many people have often hidden struggles they are too ashamed to ask for help for? Moments like that only make things worse.

This year, with all the necessary social distancing, the annual Al Smith Dinner – hosted by the archbishop of New York – didn't happen as usual.

In a normal year, the dinner brings presidential candidates and some New York glitterati together in an overcrowded ballroom, to put aside bitter partisanship for some good-humored fellowship in honor of Smith, the first Roman Catholic candidate for president. Despite the challenges this year, the event did manage to transpire with its usual spirit.

Donald Trump and Joe Biden sent video messages – both of which drove me a little batty at times (I can't listen to Biden talk about Catholic social teaching's influence on his life when he's as radical as they come these days on abortion, and he has the capital in his party to moderate its position if he cared to; Trump's bombast was as unpleasant as ever). But the beautiful part is always the prayer. Cardinal Timothy Dolan got Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton to pray privately with him together last time around. This time, I prayed for some national healing as Cardinal Dolan called upon God's grace for two broken hearts – Joe Biden who lost a son and Donald Trump, who recently lost his brother. It was a reminder in all the disagreements that we're dealing with human beings.

Kathryn Lopez

Amy Coney Barrett

seems to understand that point. Her focus on giving tribute to Ruth Bader Ginsburg during her remarks at the announcement of her nomination for Ginsburg's seat on the Supreme Court was the right, human thing to do. A woman has died. She had family who are mourning. The flags were at half-staff. This is about more than a political nuclear war.

Barrett's announcement was a beautiful moment in America, if we can put politics aside for a moment. She's a woman of faith who takes it seriously. She's excelled in her career and is lauded by colleagues, students and teachers.

I've heard young women say they were personally inspired to see her on the national stage, and to see a marriage and family represented so beautifully. That she has adopted children, too, I think is such a blessing to the nation. Vulnerable children so often go unseen. They are even more hidden during the ongoing pandemic. In the beauty of the Barrett family, we see the promise of our future, we see the best of America – hospitality and generosity.

How can you care for vulnerable children in your community? Not everyone is going to adopt a child – or two – from Haiti. But what can we do to support those who do, for instance? We all have a role to play in carrying out the promise of America, living up to the ideals of this country's founding and the potential that still exists in its example, even in this somewhat benighted national climate. These are all questions and ideas that should be on our minds. Let's not make everything about this presidential election that so many of us are glued to. And let's pray for one another, whether or not we agree with one another.

A diverse cloud of saints – and one superhero

Early in the coronavirus crisis, and in this summer's wave of chaos in American streets, Rachel Bulman began paying close attention to the faces in news reports.

She also found herself thinking about a hero: the Black Panther.

Born in the Philippines before being adopted, the Catholic writer has lived her life – as a daughter, wife and mother – in White America. As a child, she didn't look like her family. Now, her children are growing up "knowing that they just don't look like everyone else," she said. "Our family has its own story."

Bulman responded by hanging images of saints from Africa, Asia, Latin America and elsewhere in their home. There was St. Josephine Bakhita from Sudan, and an icon of St. Augustine with darker skin, since his mother was from North Africa's Berber tribe. There was St. Juan Diego of Mexico, who encountered Our Lady of Guadalupe, and Sister Thea Bowman of Mississippi, the granddaughter of slaves, whose cause for sainthood has been endorsed by America's bishops.

"I wanted my children to see all kinds of saints and heroes, including some with faces kind of like their own," she said.

Bulman had also become interested in the Marvel Comics universe and the symbolic role of King T'Challa – the Black Panther – for millions of Black Americans, especially children. She was stunned when actor Chadwick Boseman died this summer at age 43 after a long, private fight with colon cancer. He endured years of chemotherapy and multiple surgeries while filming "Black Panther" and related Avengers movies.

Searching through press reports, Bulman noted colleagues referring to Boseman as a "man of faith," a "beautiful soul" and someone with a "spiritual aura" about his work with others – including children with cancer.

At a memorial rite for Boseman, his former pastor at Welfare Baptist Church in Anderson, South Carolina, said that even after fame arrived, the actor remained the same person he'd known as a young believer.

"He's still Chad," said the Rev. Samuel Neely. "He did a lot of positive things. ... With him singing in the choir, with him working the youth group, he always was doing something, always helping out, always serving. That was his personality."

Digging deeper, Bulman said she "cried all the way through" a video of Boseman's 2018 commencement address at Howard University, his alma mater. She noted the actor's adept use of scripture, especially when describing a lesson learned when he questioned violent, hopeless themes in one of his first roles.

"I was let go from that job on the next day. ... The questions I asked set the producers on guard and perhaps paved the way for a less stereotypical portrayal for the Black actor that stepped into the role after me. As the scripture says, 'I planted the seed and Apollos watered it, but God kept it growing,'" said Boseman, citing 1 Corinthians 3:6.

The actor noted: "Sometimes you need to feel the pain and sting of defeat to activate the real passion and purpose that God predestined inside of you. God says in Jeremiah, 'I know the plans I have for you, plans to prosper you and not to harm you, plans to give you hope and a future.'"

Spiritual themes emerged in other appearances, including Boseman's remarks at the 2019 American Film Institute tribute to a mentor, Denzel Washington. He thanked the superstar – a Pentecostal pastor's son who is open about his faith – for helping young people in civic groups, theaters and churches, saying "an offering from a sage and a king is more than silver and gold. It is a seed of hope, a bud of faith. There is no Black Panther without Denzel Washington."

Boseman closed with

Ephesians 3:20: "May God bless you exceedingly and abundantly more for what's in store than He ever has before."

Bulman stressed that Boseman kept playing roles that "looked past the color of someone's skin and into their search for purpose." It was "a bonus that he didn't look like other movie superheroes. ... I also thought it was important to learn that his faith made a difference in his life and his work," she said.

"What Chadwick Boseman offered us was a chance to see that nothing is completely secular, that everyone has a chance to be reclaimed and redeemed," said Bulman. "He was a different kind of hero."
